Kim Sengupta returns to the city he saw endure a brutal siege in Libya's fight for freedom to hear what its people want one year on e two chairs were placed ide by side. One was fitted with straps and manacles, the other a seat of long nails They had been taken from a regime interrogation centre, but now had a sign stating: "Presents for the new President if he mistreats his people."

They were the only attempts at humour amid exhibits chronicling savagery and sorrow at the Martyrs' Museum in Misrata – the city which became a symbol of defiance as it stood bloody but unbowed through months of a brutal siege by Muammar Gaddafi's forces.

"They were my neighbour's children, killed by tank fire when the family was trying to flee," said Ali Shenaba, the founder and manager of the museum, pointing at photographs of two four and 10.

they look like rebel fighters? Those repeople, runs the complaint.

society." accommodation.

They hope that the impending elections on 7 July – when Libyans will just wanting to kill, they vote for a General National Congress had left civilised society" to replace the interim National Fransitional Council – will pave the way for a government which will lead Misrata and Libya towards the prosperity that a small population with large oil resources deserves. Petroleum of the country, is also in control of a vating factor for Misrata. "Look, we production, which has re-started at prized national "asset" – Gaddafi's son, didn't join the revolution because we airs of boys and girls, aged between limited capacity, is already bringing Saif al-Islam. in $1.5bn a month. But precious little Misrata, while not averse to flexing did well because we have had business stroyed and the extended family of 12 Shenaba. "But it's not just that. This

"Those regime men were lution, we need housing, we need jobs, its nearest international neighbour, we need help for our warriors who have lost arms, legs, the families of those who have lost lives. We cannot be ig-

"Free Libya" is now effectively under the control of armed and often competing groups of former rebels who part in the overthrow of Gaddafi's regime. But there is acknowledgment, sometimes grudging, of Misrata's ily who had hosted us. claim that the revolution would have been stillborn without the tenacious resistance of its people against daily bombardment.

Some of the militias are engaged in turf wars. The city of Zintan, which has 1,500 men under arms, and is the only ingbuilding, is one of them. Commercial matching power to Misrata in the west

"There was no need to do that, do of that trickles down to the ordinary its military muscle, has taken deliber-links with other countries. ate political and commercial steps to gime men were just wanting to kill. Future rulers who fail in their duties show autonomy from the government the people should know what happens they had left behind civilised can expect short shrift. "We did not go in Tripoli. The port city held elections to the country's wealth and we believe through so much suffering, lose so for a council in February – the first such in democracy. What we now wonder Mr Shenaba's own house on Tripoli many young lives, to tolerate anyone ballot anywhere in Libya since the coup is whether those who took power in Street, on the urban frontline, was de- who abuses his power again," said Mr which brought Colonel Gaddafi to Tripoli believe in the same things. power four decades ago - without bothare now sharing a temporary city has suffered so much for the revoering to consult the ruling National and there is now a lot of money com-Transitional Council (NTC) in Tripoli. ing in, where is that all going? The NTC That council, pointing to Misrata's does not tell us. After the election we without involving Tripoli.

I arrived in Misrata last April on a fishing boat carrying food and medicine to a dockyard under fire. Then, at the height of its onslaught, the regime was determined to choke off the only lifeline the defendants had left - the each claim to have played a decisive sea. The house where we stayed that night was hit by missile fire the following day, injuring members of the fam-

In the east of th city, trucks now form queues to Qasr Ahmed, Libya's biggest container port, with contractors busy ticking off inventories. Mohammed Abu Sameh, who I recalled leading a bunch of teenage rebels out of a burnprofit, he insists, is not the main moti were poor, we were always a place which

"No, we joined because we believe

"Oil production has started again mercantile history, subsequently must open up the accounts and look signed a trade agreement with Malta, at where the money is going. Gaddafi

DESPATCHES BLOODSHED,

The Independent's reports from the front line of the Libyan conflict:

12 April 2011: "The missiles came in at 3.20am, exploding in regular bursts, smashing down walls and shattering windows. The possible target was an oil depot, but again it was the civilians who paid a lethal price – as they had done so often in Misrata. Five bodies were dug out of the rubble and another 20 were wounded. The attack had taken place hours after Gaddafi had supposedly accepted a peace deal to end this vicious war."

13 April 2011: "There has been no let-up in the ferocity of the strife in this western city which has become the symbol of defiance for the revolution. The calm of an early morning of sunshine and breeze was soon shattered by booming echoes of missile fire from Muammar Gaddafi's forces... followed by the prolonged sound of airplanes above. But the real violence was unfolding in the centre of the city, at Tripoli Street, which has become an arena for enemies meeting in implacable hatred. Part of the thoroughfare is a snipers' alley for the regime, where civilians, including children, have been shot. Other stretches are a free-fire zone for both sides with buildings changing hands by the hour."

WEEPING AND DEFIANCE

15 April 2011: "The official graveyard for the district has been too dangerous in the last fortnight because of sniper fire. The [funeral] service became an occasion for outpourings of anger and grief. Mourners wept, as others shouted 'Misrata will be your graveyard, O Gaddafi'."

KIM SENGUPTA

used the oil money to make his family and friends rich and stupid wars in places like Chad. We want ordinary Libyans to benefit now.'

This feeling that Libya, unlike some other countries of the Arab Spring. does not need the money of foreign countries which may seek to spread their influence, has become increasingly prevalent, especially in relation to Qatar and Saudi Arabia, which led the bankrolling of rebels last year. They are doing the same, it is claimed, with Islamist groups for the election.

poster in Misrata of Union for the Homeland candidate Abd

The Martyr's Museum, which has attracted hundreds of visitors from within and outside Libya, displays large photographs of the Emir of Qatar and the Heir Apparent.

when we were struggling against the more difficult. The new government we should decide our own future.

"There are certain parties, people, whose policies worry me. I think (obsessive compulsive disorder), physwomen should behave modestly in ical symptoms like diarrhoea. Children Libya, we are Muslims. But I want my are some of the worst affected. There daughter to have education like my are young fighters who have bursts of son, the same opportunities. The anger, drug and alcohol abuse. We are Libyan people will decide what they treating their families. But we are also want and the government should look treating regime soldiers who are now after them."

that he will be looked after. The 20- from guilt."

year-old student lay in his bed at Al Hikma Hospital with intestinal damage and part of his right arm torn off injuries suffered while fighting in Tripoli Street last year. The doctors in Misrata thought he would lose the use of his arm, but a German doctor managed to restore partial use. He still needs further surgeries for that, as well as the stomach wounds.

The NTC has been paying for surgery abroad for fighters and civilians, but the rules were altered after claims that the system was being abused with people using it for cosmetic treatment community had the underlying motiand dental work, especially in coun-vation of racism. Misratis defend their tries like Jordan, where there are no visa requirements for Libvans.

"I regret taking part in the fighting now because of what has happened to me. I wanted to finish my education and get a good job, but I don't know whether that is going to be possible. My family are poor - they can't afford the medical care - so I don't know what will happen if the government does not pay. It is very depressing for me,' Libyans celebrate the death of said Mr Omar. Gaddafi. Top right, an election

There are hundreds of physically handicapped people in Misrata. But that is not the only scar left by the war. A recent World Health Organisation (WHO) study found 21,000 out of the city's population of 250,000 were suffering from psychological trauma.

Dr Mustafa Shegmani, a clinical psychologist who qualified at Rennes University in France, is in charge of a team of 24 specialists who have treated more than 700 patients, aged between two and 80 years in the last three

"During the fighting I was helping out other doctors dealing with emergency cases at the hospital. There were casualties, fatalities, body parts on operating tables, stretchers," he recalled. "That room was later turned into some where the doctors could get some rest. I walked in one day and began to have flashbacks, bodies, blood. So I have a little personal experience of what people are going through myself."

There will be long-term problems which need to be addressed, Dr Looking at these, Basma Husseini, Shegmani stressed. "At the moment we visiting with her two children, reflect- don't really have a government, no real ed: "I hear they were very good to us authority, which makes things even tyrant. Maybe in the future we should will have to make sure that they provide pay the money back. But now I think the money for all the proper treatment which will be needed in the future.

"We have neurosis, anxiety, OCD prisoners - they have the same kind Abdul Munam Omar is not so sure of problems, they are also suffering were the victims of aggression. But a few have now begun to speak about their unease at what took place. "It is still difficult, but maybe with action, insisting that it is they who time we can start examining this. Some from Tawargha did very bad things, but $there \, are \, innocent \, people \, among \, them \,$ who suffered as a result. We should have been more careful, some bad things happened," said Abdulhamid, who did not want his full name published.

World/39

"Maybe one day the names of Tawarghans will be in the museum." Some former fighters have taken a new path to ensuring future accountability for those in power and trying to prevent abuse. Emad Shlak met foreign journalists in Misrata and has now decided to become one himself.

Mr Shlak's new life as a cameraman is not entirely safe. He had known Tim Hetherington and Chris Hondros, photojournalists who were killed in Misrata, and he worked with Marie Colvin, who died later in Syria.

"I was very sorry about all of them we will be doing."

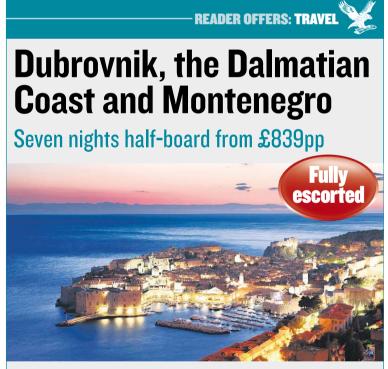

who have bursts of anger, drug and alcohol abuse' The regime forces are not the only Tawargha, which was accused of collusion with the regime, were driven out and their homes destroyed. Many were killed, others put in prison. What happened casts a cloud over Misrata, with charges that the vengeance meted out on Tawargha's black ones suffering from a degree of guilt.

The population of neighbouring and very upset when I heard about Marie. But many of us realised that the reason we got help from the outside world was because of these journalists. The governments we have after the elections will need watching. Foreign media will not be here, so that is what Dubrovnik's beauty is legendary, the Dalmatian coastline is one of the most dramatic in Europe, and if you can imagine what the Mediterranean was like thirty years ago, Montenegro is probably it. Selected departures September to October 2012, the price includes:

- Return flights to Dubrovnik or Split from Gatwick, Heathrow or a further four regional airports, taxes and
- Seven nights three and four-star, halfboard hotel accommodation
- Tour of Dubrovnik, 'Pearl of the Adriatic'
- Visit to Krka National Park and its waterfalls
- Visit to Mostar, setting of the famous bridge
- Tour to Montenegro, one of the most beautiful countries of the Mediterranean ■ Visit to Split and tour of the Emperor
- Diocletian's palace, one of the greatest Roman structures in eastern Europe
- Visit to medieval Trogin The services of an experienced
- tour manager

To book or to browse hundreds of other travel offers visit: independent.myreaderoffers.com Brochure Line: 0844 571 1978

Prices are per person, based on two sharing and subject to availability. Holidays are operated and organised by Riviera Travel, Abta V4744 Atol 3430, your contract is with them and their terms and conditions will apply. When you respond to offers we may use your information to contact you with offers/services we believe will be of interest. Please give your mobile or email details if you wish to receive offers by sms or email. We will not give your data to other companies without your permission; please let us know if you are happy for us to do so. 0844 calls charged at 5ppm from BT landlines, other networks may vary.